A Message from Dean Erwin Chemerinsky

From the beginning, UCI Law set out to be a visionary law school, focused on training talented and passionate lawyers and driven by academic excellence, intellectual rigor and a commitment to enrich our communities through public service. We didn’t want to be just another law school. We wanted to be among the best at inspiring and preparing students for the practice of law at the highest levels of the profession.

By every measure, we are succeeding.

Our faculty members are extraordinary scholars. A recent study ranked their scholarly impact as sixth in the country behind Yale, Harvard, University of Chicago, New York University and Stanford. They also are superb teachers and mentors. Our alumni, faithful and enthusiastic ambassadors of UCI Law, have earned prestigious judicial clerkships and landed impressive jobs in every area of legal practice. And our students, outstanding in the classroom and beyond, enrich the Law School in more ways than I can count or could imagine.

Individually and collectively, students have played an integral role in making UCI Law a warm, collegial community. They work hard on the law review, in moot court and trial advocacy competitions at home and across the nation, as community fellows, in organizing speaker events, in the Student Bar Association, and in so much else. They take part in prodigious amounts of pro bono and community service locally, throughout the country and around the globe. They have made a real difference in this institution and, more importantly, in people's lives.

I am so proud of all that we have accomplished in making UCI Law a place of excellence and innovation in teaching, scholarship and public service.

I invite you to explore the pages of this publication to find out more about our programs and people. Better yet, please schedule a time to visit our campus. We would love to meet you in person.

Boldly Redefining Legal Education

Given a blank slate, our accomplished, nationally-ranked faculty designed a cutting-edge approach to legal education not found at other law schools. Law students everywhere must learn subject areas like constitutional law, contracts, civil/criminal procedure and torts. But at UCI Law, the differences are how the doctrinal coursework is taught and what courses our students take.

- Our student-faculty ratio is among the best in the country: 7:1
- The average number of students in a first-year class: 33
- The average number of students in an upper-level class: 11

As of 2015-2016
Focus on Methods of Analysis

Unlike at other law schools, our first-year curriculum is structured according to the different methods of legal analysis, teaching students analytical skills that will be useful in a variety of doctrinal classes. In the Statutory Analysis class, for example, students analyze statutes using criminal law to learn skills that translate well to other statute-based practice areas like tax law, labor law or intellectual property law.

Real World Client Advocacy

In addition to developing traditional research, writing and oral advocacy skills, all first-year students are required to conduct intake interviews at a local legal aid or public defender office. Thus, our students, under supervision, interact with real clients beginning in their first year of law school. First-year students are also encouraged to participate in UCI Law’s Pro Bono Program — one of the most robust among U.S. law schools — developing practical legal skills with real clients while providing much-needed assistance to underserved members of the community.

Distinctive Courses

We have designed a curriculum for the 21st century. For example, first-year students take both International Legal Analysis, a critical course in a world of increasing globalization, and Legal Profession, which introduces students to many aspects of the profession they are joining.

Practical Training Integrated into Traditional Study

Also different from other law schools, beginning in the first year the UCI Law curriculum integrates traditional doctrinal coursework with practical training, teaching current legal theory with skills-based practice exercises.

These differences are at the heart of UCI Law’s first-year experience. Here, students learn not just the subject matter of areas of law, but how to apply legal concepts and think like a practicing lawyer. This unique, hands-on approach prepares our students for legal practice at the highest levels of the profession.
Experiential Learning in the First Year

How do you prepare law students to apply what they learn in school to all of the challenges that will come after graduation? Start with real world experience.

In every year of law school, we want our students to have the opportunity to represent real clients facing real challenges. Under close supervision, UCI Law students interact with clients right from the start, through an interviewing component of the Lawyering Skills course. The spring semester class schedule is structured so that all first-year students have both an entire morning and an entire afternoon free one day a week to provide time for each student to conduct a client intake interview at a legal services office (e.g., the Legal Aid Society of Orange County, the Public Law Center, the Orange County Public Defender). Through this experience, students interact with real clients from the beginning of law school. When students are not conducting interviews, they often use the free block for pro bono work.

The first-year curriculum also includes Legal Profession, a course that gives students tools to resolve the legal and ethical issues that lawyers confront in a variety of practice settings. Students learn about the profession they are joining: its ethics, economics and sociology.
Law Clinics

What can you learn in a clinic that you can’t learn in a classroom? How to turn theory into practice.

At UCI Law, we consider the clinical experience essential to making our students practice-ready. Every one of our students completes at least one semester of clinical education. Students may choose from several core clinics in which they act as the primary legal representative for their clients. Each of the core clinics is taught by at least one member of our full-time faculty.

In addition to a guaranteed placement in one of the core clinics, UCI Law offers elective clinics for second- and third-year students. For students whose career ambitions will be better served by completing the core clinic requirement in an alternative field placement, UCI Law provides opportunities to work under the supervision of an attorney with an outside nonprofit or governmental organization, such as a district attorney’s office or the IRS. Students in these alternative field placements, like students in our faculty-supervised core clinics, act as the primary legal representative of the organization or its clients.

Core Clinics

- Appellate Litigation
  Students gain experience in legal research, writing and oral advocacy through representing a client in an appeal to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit.

- Community & Economic Development
  Students represent groups and individuals in transactional and litigation projects that impact client communities.

- Criminal Justice Law (planned to begin in fall 2016)
  It is expected that students will represent defendants in misdemeanor cases and work on criminal justice reform issues.

- Domestic Violence
  Students assist domestic violence survivors in achieving self-sufficiency and freedom from assault.

- Environmental Law
  Students represent clients in litigation and non-litigation matters spanning a wide range of environmental and natural resources law issues.

- Immigrant Rights
  Students provide direct representation to individual and group clients on matters ranging from deportation defense and post-conviction advocacy to workers’ rights and affirmative civil rights litigation.

- Intellectual Property, Arts, and Technology
  Students advise and represent clients on a variety of matters dealing with copyright, patent, privacy and media law, among other areas.

- International Justice
  Students work with activists, lawyers, diplomats, scholars and NGOs at home and around the world to develop and implement strategies of accountability for human rights abuses.
Elective Clinics

- Civil Rights Litigation
  Students litigate cases involving a range of substantive issues under federal and California civil rights law.

- Department of Fair Employment and Housing Civil Rights
  Students handle matters for the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH), the nation’s largest state civil rights agency.

- International Human Rights
  Students advocate for the use of international human rights norms as a basis for relief within the U.S. legal system or to address human rights violations committed abroad by U.S. actors.

- Reproductive Justice
  Students draft legislation and work with legislators, policy makers and advocacy groups to promote and protect reproductive liberties, advance equality, and enact laws and regulations.

- Veterans
  Students represent veterans on discharge upgrades, and initial claims and appeals to the Department of Veterans Affairs.
Externships

What can help students begin to build their professional identity? Working alongside judges and lawyers in the field.

UCI Law’s externship program provides academic credit for students working in a variety of field placements locally, across the country and internationally. A primary goal of the program is to increase our students’ understanding of the fundamental values of the legal profession, including a commitment to promoting access to justice and the ethical practice of law.

Students work for judges, nonprofit organizations and government agencies on both the federal and state levels. During their externship, students complete a classroom component and meet academic course requirements designed to maximize their learning in the workplace.

UCDC Law Program

Unique to the University of California, this collaborative, full-semester externship program in Washington, D.C., combines a weekly seminar-style course with a full-time field placement. Law students have an unparalleled opportunity to learn how federal statutes, regulations and policies are made, changed and understood in the nation’s capital. During four months of immersion in the theory and practice of Washington lawyering, students have contact with all three branches of the federal government, independent regulatory agencies and advocacy nonprofits.
In the 2015 study by University of St. Thomas School of Law, the UCI Law faculty ranked No. 6 in the nation in scholarly impact.¹ The top law schools are:

1. Yale
2. Harvard
3. Chicago
4. New York University
5. Stanford
6. University of California, Irvine

STUDENT EXPERIENCES

Collegial and Supportive

We want our students to succeed, grow and enjoy their experience in law school. Whether in school or in the workplace, good lawyers know how to work together to get the best results. United in this belief, we strive to cultivate an environment in which students see one another as colleagues instead of competitors, and in which the faculty and the legal community can work closely with students to help them reach their fullest potential.

The following student voices offer just a glimpse of how professors, administrators, staff, alumni and friends of UCI Law go out of their way to ensure every student has the resources he or she needs to thrive — and to build a collegial, supportive community.

Helen Boyer, 1L

“Before visiting the campus, I spoke with a student who gushed about the wonderful, close-knit and supportive community at UCI Law. I had never heard of anyone describing a law school this way before — I thought it sounded too good to be true! When I visited a few months later, I saw first-hand that she was right. I was greeted with excitement and warmth by current students, administrators, professors and the Dean. I knew right away that UCI Law would be a great fit for me.”
Kellye Ng-McCullough, 3L

“I knew from the very beginning that UCI Law was a special place. I felt UCI had invested in me long before I applied to the school when I participated in the UC Irvine Pre-Law Outreach Program. The program was designed to help students like me, who did not have any lawyers in their families, with the law school application process. For six weeks, I took mock classes with UCI Law professors, heard from inspirational attorneys and, most importantly, was mentored by UCI Law students. I immediately noticed the supportive environment that is so integral to the school’s culture. I knew then that I wanted to immerse myself at UCI and contribute to the encouraging atmosphere that has played such a key role in our students’ successes.”

Drew Morrill, 2L

“Because UCI Law is still new, students can help shape the school’s identity. We have a unique opportunity to start organizations or even suggest new class offerings. Overall, everyone here is very welcoming and extremely passionate about the school. The faculty are not only top scholars in their respective fields, but they’re also amazing mentors, and they truly care about their students. One professor even spent an hour on the phone with me on a Saturday night, preparing me for an important interview. All I did was send an email asking for advice, when suddenly my phone started ringing.”
Andrenna Hidalgo Berggren, 2L

“Visiting UCI Law as a prospective student was unlike any of my experiences at other law schools. I sat in on an International Law class, and students immediately introduced themselves, asked about my interests, and even offered to share their briefs with me so I could follow along. Observing the class, I saw more collaboration than competitiveness. My visit made the decision very easy for me. And, being able to study by the beach doesn’t hurt.”

Matthew Fritz-Mauer, J.D. ’15/Ph.D. (expected 2019)

“Being in a joint J.D./Ph.D. program at UC Irvine has been an amazing experience. UCI is filled with accomplished lawyers and academics who take teaching and mentorship very seriously. I can’t imagine a more supportive, energizing environment, and I’m confident that my education will prepare me to both practice law and enter academia.”
Nefi Acosta, 3L

“I decided to pursue a law degree to advocate for those less fortunate. UC Irvine was a natural choice for many reasons: the small class sizes, employment and clerkship rates, location, emphasis on training versus theory, focus on public service... I can’t say enough good things about UCI Law.”

Lauren Yun, 1L

“I chose UCI Law because of the amazing professors, high employment rate after graduation, and overwhelming kindness extended to me by faculty and administrators throughout my selection process. When I was still deciding which law school to attend, all of the faculty and administrators I met advised me about law school generally, not just about UCI specifically, so I could make the best choice for my personal goals. The honest kindness, care and interest in my success that I felt from everyone I interacted with at UCI made me realize that I wanted to be part of a community that fostered these qualities among their faculty, staff and students.”
Commitment to Public Service

Instilling the value of public service is at the very core of UCI Law’s mission. Since we opened our doors in 2009, 92 percent of all UCI Law students have provided more than 50,000 hours of pro bono legal services for the poor and underserved — locally and beyond.

Our students recognize that many people are unable to access the legal services they so desperately need. Our programs provide students the opportunity and training to better meet that need, and to use their legal education to improve society.
Pro Bono Program

UCI Law’s Pro Bono Program is a reflection of the school’s deep commitment to public service and experiential learning. The school encourages each student to participate by providing legal services to underserved communities and causes while supervised by an attorney or member of the Law School faculty.

The UCI Law Pro Bono Policy states an expectation that both students and faculty will regularly engage in public service work throughout their careers and encourages them to set yearly public service goals similar to those expected of practicing attorneys. Although students do not receive academic credit or financial gain for their work, by engaging in real world projects they have the opportunity to practice and expand legal skills learned in the classroom.

Collaborations with more than 20 law firms over the past six years have helped UCI Law to significantly increase services to low-income clients, while also helping to alleviate the caseloads of local legal services providers. More recently UCI Law teamed up with Inland Counties Legal Services to provide free bimonthly family law clinics for low-income residents in the Coachella Valley. Known as Coachella Saturday Justice, the project allows students to perform intake interviews and make a huge difference in the lives of families residing in a legally isolated area.

UCI Law students have directly parlayed their roles as pro bono project leaders into post-graduate paid positions. Meanwhile, UCI Law alumni in private practice have been extremely active pro bono volunteers, and many have joined the ranks of attorneys who supervise UCI Law student pro bono work.

Approximately 92 percent of all UCI Law students, since the school opened its doors in 2009, have participated in pro bono work through dozens of projects. The class of 2015 alone had 96 percent participation, collectively completing more than 13,200 pro bono hours in their three years of law school. Projects are designed to help the underserved, including:

- Domestic violence victims who need temporary restraining order declarations
- Low-wage workers with legal issues related to their employment
- Job seekers who need a fresh start with an expungement
- Elderly and disabled residents seeking assistance with their Supplemental Security Income applications
- Family law clients involved in divorce or custody issues
- Victims of human trafficking who need legal information
- Families of special education students that want to understand their legal rights
Financial Support for Public Service

UCI Law offers full-tuition Public Service Scholarships to students interested in pursuing careers as public interest attorneys. Funded by private donations, these three-year awards are offered to incoming law students who have demonstrated exceptional dedication to public service and are most likely to dedicate their legal careers to working on behalf of underserved communities and causes. Public Service Scholars also benefit from specialized programming and mentoring.

UCI Law students may also qualify for the following public interest funding opportunities:

- The Public Interest Law Fund supports students during summer jobs after their first and second years of law school with public interest organizations and government agencies.
- Bridge to Practice funding helps support select graduates as they volunteer for public service organizations while waiting for bar results.
- Post-Graduate Public Service Fellowships support select recent graduates pursuing year-long volunteer placements at nonprofit organizations or government agencies.
- The Loan Repayment Assistance Program is one of the most robust in the country, helping law graduates who pursue public service careers repay their student loans for up to 10 years, including undergraduate loans.

Community Programs

Two UCI Law programs encourage students from underserved communities to pursue a career in law and ultimately give back to their communities as practicing attorneys.

Saturday Academy of Law (SAL)
Through SAL, a six-week program conducted Saturday mornings at UCI Law, ninth-graders from economically challenged communities have the unique opportunity to improve their reading, writing and critical thinking skills while learning more about law and the legal profession. More than 500 Santa Ana Unified School District students have completed the program since it launched in 2009; we recently added students from Garden Grove and Anaheim high schools. SAL classes are taught by credentialed teachers and supported by undergraduate teaching assistants, and UCI Law students teach a portion of the curriculum. The first SAL graduates started college in fall 2012. Since then a majority of SAL alumni have enrolled in four-year colleges and universities across the nation, including UC Irvine.

Pre-Law Outreach Program (POP)
POP runs in the summer and provides six Saturday lessons for undergraduate students from disadvantaged backgrounds who wish to attend law school. POP participants come from all over the United States; most are the first in their families to attend college. They receive information from UCI Law faculty and staff, judges, law students and practicing attorneys on how to prepare a competitive law school application and on how to succeed in law school once enrolled. Since 2010, POP has helped more than 200 college students better understand the law school admissions process, and has provided each with mentorship and guidance. A number of POP graduates are currently enrolled at UCI Law, and several are attending other law schools around the country.

Collaborative Campus

UCI Law combines the best features of a small, collegial and supportive community with a large and renowned research institution. Our small class size and 7-1 student-faculty ratio enable students to have more individual time with faculty. Moreover, many faculty members from across campus hold joint appointments in the Law School, incorporating breakthrough multidisciplinary scholarship into the UCI Law curriculum.

Top University Rankings

- An analysis by Times Higher Education, released in April 2015, ranked UCI No. 1 in the U.S. and No. 7 in the world among the 100 best universities less than 50 years old.

- UCI is No. 9 among the nation’s best public universities, according to the 2016 U.S. News & World Report “America’s Best Colleges” ranking of undergraduate programs.

- UCI is No. 1 in The New York Times inaugural ranking of best colleges for low-income students.
Thought Leaders

The Centers and Institutes at UCI Law focus in depth on some of the most important and difficult legal issues confronting the world. They are all interdisciplinary, bringing together UCI Law faculty and students with professors from across campus and throughout the globe.

Framework for Success

The Career Development Office (CDO) at UCI Law supports our students in three critical areas:

Job Search: The legal profession comprises many areas of practice, each requiring distinct knowledge, skills and abilities. Throughout the academic year, we conduct panel discussions, brown bag lunches and workshops covering a broad range of topics, including job search basics, substantive practice overviews and self-assessment. Each student works individually with an attorney advisor to craft his or her strategic career path.

Career Education and Professional Development: The CDO educates students regarding legal employment opportunities with public interest organizations, government entities, law firms, corporate legal departments and in other practice settings. The CDO also works closely with students to develop the professional skills necessary to enter the job market as competitive, practice-ready applicants.

Recruiting and Networking Opportunities: The CDO organizes on- and off-campus interview opportunities, panels and receptions with legal employers.

➤ Percentage of graduates placed in full-time jobs that require a J.D. or pursuing an advanced degree within 10 months of graduation (class of 2014): 86%

Launch Your Legal Career

UCI Law students have secured summer and post-graduate employment all over the world, including placements at law firms of all sizes, public interest and government agencies, and major corporations in such sectors as technology, entertainment and finance. Across the United States — including Alaska, California, Hawaii, Illinois, Maryland, Michigan, New Mexico, New York, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, the U.S. Virgin Islands and Washington, D.C. — federal and state judges have hired our students for post-graduate clerkships. In fact, UCI Law’s federal judicial clerkship placement rate is among the very best in the nation.

The following are just a few examples of the many employers who have worked with our students:

“When I first began applying for and selecting a law school, many top schools appeared indistinguishable — quality faculty, competitive admissions standards, great job placement. It wasn’t until I visited UCI Law that I understood its true value: community. The UCI Law community is vibrant and central to the school’s mission. During my visit I observed students having coffee with faculty in the courtyard, collaborating in study rooms, and even coordinating their next intramural sports team. Seeing students enjoying the law school experience and making quality friendships made UCI Law an easy choice. Additionally, I was able to start building my network while in law school, which helped me secure my dream post-graduate position.”
Tyler A. Stutin ’15
Lieutenant
U.S. Coast Guard Judge Advocate General
Pearl Harbor, Hawaii

“UCI Law gave me a solid foundation in the law and allowed me to continue my service in the Coast Guard in a new role as a judge advocate. The UCI Law community also challenged me to consider the intersection of law and human dignity in varied and unique ways. Through classes, clinical work, mentoring and a judicial externship, my eyes were opened to the fact that the law is more than a job. This outlook helps me each day in my current role as a military defense attorney. A criminal charge is a serious and frightening life event. UCI Law gave me the tools to represent my clients, but also the ability to recognize their humanity. These are people enduring unimaginable stress, the complicated machinery of the judicial process, and the fear of the unknown.”

Zeenat Hassan ’13
Staff Attorney
AIDS Legal Referral Panel
San Francisco, California

“The clinical courses I took at UCI have been invaluable. I was deeply interested in the cases I worked on, and I appreciated being able to supplement the hands-on training with coursework on theory and strategy. In practice, there is seldom time or opportunity to reflect deeply on the work we do. But having a solid clinical background allows me to analyze my work more deeply and ensure that I keep pushing myself further and further to be a better advocate for the public.”

Associate Attorney

“My UCI Law experience helped me to understand that no matter where your legal career takes you, it is important to use your unique skills to help people and communities in need. I am a labor and employment attorney, and I love what I do. By staying involved with nonprofit organizations, I have found ways to incorporate pro bono work in my legal practice — such as providing pro bono legal support to special needs children and other vulnerable populations. I also serve on the board of directors of the Family Support Network, a nonprofit that assists children with disabilities and their families to navigate the social services they need to improve their lives.”

“My firm devotes itself entirely to serving the needs of farmworkers, and as partner my role includes serving as labor and employment litigator, general counsel for a set of nonprofits and general administrator. Essentially my work requires me to be jack-of-all-trades, master of all. I need to be a litigation expert; the Immigrant Rights Clinic at UCI Law taught me that. I need to be a public policy expert; the academic courses at UCI Law taught me that. I need to be an expert in building new institutions; all things UCI Law taught me that. In fact, UCI Law faculty and students introduced me to all of the key people that led to the work I’m doing right now. Thanks to UCI Law, I am exactly the type of lawyer that I went to law school to become.”

“One of the benefits of attending UCI Law is that everyone who decides to join the community is dedicated to making it excellent. This is what I immediately thought when I attended Admitted Students Weekend. Our faculty is extremely knowledgeable and includes many professors who are known as leading experts in their respective fields. And not only are they intelligent — they’re also approachable and dedicated to the success of their students. I left Admitted Students Weekend thinking: I don’t know yet what I want to do with my legal career, but when I figure it out, this school will be my best advocate and supporter.”

Cinthia Flores ’14
Project Manager
UCLA Labor Center
Los Angeles, California

“In my current role as project manager, I’m leading an effort to address the Central American unaccompanied minors humanitarian crisis. I also serve as co-chair of Latinas Lead California’s Young Professionals Network, and I was recently appointed by the Governor to the Health Professions Education Foundation board. As a future agent of social change, I believe UCI Law was the best law school for me to gain legal training with an emphasis on social justice. UCI Law represents the nexus of advocacy and learning by doing, and it provided me with the training necessary to be the best advocate I can be for low-wage workers and undocumented people.”
Christina Zabat-Fran ’12
Director of Legal Affairs
St. John Knits
Irvine, California

“With mentorship from UCI Law’s incredible faculty, I pursued a career path that allows me to support creative work and apply my passion for building strategic partnerships to the practice of law, leading intellectual property and business transactions in an international arena. Now, as corporate counsel for a global luxury apparel brand, I’m ‘in-house’ with my client every day, guiding the company on everything and anything they need, and I absolutely love it!”

“I will never forget being able to work with a fellow student on a Ninth Circuit case with Dean Chemerinsky as our supervisor. We worked on the brief from beginning to end and argued the case in front of a panel with the Dean sitting next to me as co-counsel. I also appeared before magistrate judges at post-indictment arraignments, served as lead counsel on a bench trial and externed at the U.S. Attorney’s Office. These experiences, made possible because I attended UCI Law, have prepared me to hit the ground running as I’ve started work as an attorney.”
