After a minor delay, on Tuesday, hundreds of students and faculty members are converging on the Santa Ana Unified School District to address their concerns about the future of the schools.

The event, called “Schools of the Future,” is a two-day conference that will bring together leaders from across Southern California to discuss how schools can be improved.

The conference is being held in response to the state’s recent decision to close four high schools in the district, including Santa Ana Unified High School, which serves about 10,000 students.

The conference will feature presentations by education experts, as well as discussions among teachers, parents, students and community members.

“We are here because we believe that our schools should be places where all students can thrive and succeed,” said Dr. William Rueda, superintendent of the Santa Ana Unified School District.

The conference will include sessions on topics such as technology in education, school design, and the role of parents and communities in supporting schools.

“We want to create a space where everyone can come together to share ideas and find solutions that will benefit all of our students,” Rueda said.

The conference is scheduled for Tuesday and Wednesday at the Anaheim Convention Center. It is free to attend and open to the public.
