

EARLY DECISION CERTIFICATION

UCI Law evaluates Early Decision applications using the same selection criteria as regular decision applications. However, Early Decision applicants' interest in UCI Law, evidenced by their Early Decision application designation, is specially considered by the Admissions Committee. Otherwise, they have no significant advantage in the selection process. Refer to the application and application instructions for Early Decision deadlines.

If admitted through the Early Decision program, applicants commit themselves to matriculating at UCI Law. Applicants may not apply to other Early Decision programs during the same admissions cycle. Early Decision applicants may only apply to other law schools on a regular decision basis. Upon admission to UCI Law through the Early Decision program, applicants must withdraw all other law school applications and may initiate no new applications. Failure to honor these commitments may result in the revocation of the Early Decision admission offer.

Applicants admitted through the Early Decision program receive a $30,000 annual scholarship ($90,000 cumulative over the three years of the JD program). Early Decision applicants may apply for additional financial aid in need based grants or loans. Specific information on individual financial aid awards is available after Early Decision applicants are notified of the decision on their application. If financial aid is a significant factor in determining where to attend law school, Early Decision applicants should carefully consider applying to UCI Law's Early Decision program because they will not be able to compare financial aid awards from other law schools.

In order to secure their spot in the Fall 2021 entering class, all admitted applicants will be required to submit both a positive Statement of Intent to Register and pay a monetary seat deposit no later than the date(s) indicated with their offer of admission.

Applicants not admitted through the Early Decision program will be held and evaluated again as part of the regular applicant pool.

UCI Law reserves the right to provide peer law schools with the names of applicants accepted under our Early Decision program.
