

INTERNATIONAL LAW

University of California, Irvine
School of Law

Unique global perspective through an interdisciplinary lens

To practice law at the highest levels of the profession, lawyers need a global perspective on law, ethics and strategy — and the ability to solve a wide range of legal problems that cross borders. For this reason, international and comparative law always has been a focus of teaching, scholarship and public service at the University of California, Irvine School of Law.

Esteemed faculty. UCI Law's international and comparative law experts include one of the foremost authorities on international trade law and vice president of the American Society of International Law; a cross-cultural dispute resolution pioneer; an adviser for the U.S. Foreign Relations Law restatement; leading voices on African law and Chinese law; a former director of the American Bar Foundation and one of the world's leading scholars on the international legal profession; and the United Nations special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression — among other distinguished scholars.

World-class research. The interdisciplinary centers at UCI Law foster intellectual debate on the development and operation of law in an interconnected world. The Center on Globalization, Law, and Society brings together preeminent scholars of international, transnational and comparative law with social science researchers to build understanding and spur exchange on how to address transnational issues in a more effective and just way. The Center for African Business, Law & Entrepreneurship is shaping the discussion of issues related to law and legal reform in Africa, and the Long US-China Institute studies the opportunities and challenges of China's unprecedented rise.

Unique curriculum. UCI Law is among the few law schools in the United States that have incorporated a dedicated international law course into the first-year curriculum. The course, International Legal Analysis, helps students learn to solve international and transnational legal problems that they are increasingly likely to face in today's globalized practice of law. Students can build on this first-year foundation by choosing from a variety of upper-division law courses and two international law clinics.

Public service commitment. At UCI Law, students can get real world international and comparative law experience through clinics and provide public service in international law through pro bono work. The International Human Rights Clinic, for example, allows students to participate in litigating cases in international and domestic forums, while students in the International Justice Clinic work with the Office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights to protect freedom of expression globally, online and offline.

FACULTY SCHOLARSHIP

International and comparative law scholarship at the University of California, Irvine School of Law transcends boundaries and is playing a leading role in shaping law and policy across the globe. Together, UCI Law's world-renowned experts are leading discussions about the law's roles and constraints in issues that move beyond national borders, including the economy, human rights, health and the environment.

CENTERS: LAW AND SCHOLARSHIP IN ACTION

UC Irvine is one of the world's leading universities for the interdisciplinary study of law and society. UCI Law builds on existing strengths by expanding connections among the law school, campus and local, state, national and global communities of scholars and affected constituencies. Through the following centers and institutes, UCI Law advances dialogue, collaboration and scholarship on a host of international and comparative law issues:

Center for African Business, Law & Entrepreneurship. Directed by Professor Olufunmilayo Arewa, CABLE provides a robust environment in which questions related to law, business and innovation in African contexts are considered, researched and discussed.

Center for Biotechnology and Global Health Policy. Directed by Chancellor's Professor of Law Michele Goodwin, CBGHP serves as a reference point for research, policy development and advocacy concerning science, biotechnology, bioethics and health care in the United States and abroad.

Center on Globalization, Law and Society. Directed by Chancellor's Professor of Law Gregory Shaffer, GLAS is the center for the study of international, transnational and comparative law across the UC Irvine campus — serving as a focal point for cutting-edge research on the development and operation of law in a globalized society.

Center in Law, Society and Culture. Co-directed by Chancellor's Professor of Law Catherine Fisk and Professor Mona Lynch, CLSC promotes interdisciplinary research collaboration and graduate student training about law and the humanities, social sciences and arts on a wide range of topics, including criminal justice, corporate behavior, discrimination, labor, human rights, globalization and migration.

Korea Law Center. This center seeks to inspire students, legal scholars, judges and business leaders from South Korea and the United States to find practical solutions to problems arising at the intersection of U.S. and Korean law.

Long US-China Institute. Directed by Long Professor Benjamin van Rooij, the Long Institute serves as a premier campuswide research entity to understand the challenges and opportunities of China's rise. The institute has faculty from across campus that focus on issues of trade and investment, social development, wealth management and philanthropy, and health and safety.

These centers and institutes organize a host of featured events throughout the academic year, including:

- Africa Innovation 2015
- Patent Sovereignty and International Law Conference
- Transnational Legal Orders for Private Law and Business Regulation Symposium
- Intellectual Property Protection in China Seminar (presented with the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office)
- International Trade & Investment Law Workshop: Comparisons, Empirical Studies, New Technologies, Public Policy

Related interdisciplinary programs at UC Irvine include:

Center for Asian Studies

Center for Citizen Peacebuilding

Center for Global Peace and Conflict Studies

Center for Research on International and Global Studies

BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

International and comparative law opportunities at UCI Law extend beyond coursework, clinics and public service. Many students work as research assistants with professors on pioneering research, and others are involved in one or more of the following:

UCI Journal of International, Transnational, and Comparative Law. This student-run publication is dedicated to the advancement of legal scholarship in the field of international law. The inaugural issue is scheduled to launch in 2015.

Philip C. Jessup International Law Moot Court Competition. Each year, UCI Law sends a team of students to compete in the world's largest moot court competition. Featuring participants from more than 500 law schools across more than 80 countries, the competition offers an excellent opportunity for improving oral advocacy, writing, research and collaboration skills — as well as developing expertise on cutting-edge international legal issues.

UCI Global Justice Summit. This student-run constitutional drafting simulation gives UCI Law students the opportunity to negotiate a hypothetical conflict and draft a constitution or treaty. Prior to the two-day summit, students are trained on effective mediation and negotiation techniques, and on comparative constitutional analysis. During the simulation, students receive additional insight on current constitutional drafting issues or conflict resolution from prominent scholars in the field.

Externships. Students have the opportunity to spend an entire semester or a summer working in an international law placement, such as the Office of the U.N. High Commissioner for Human Rights in Geneva, the Inter-American Commission for Human Rights in Washington, D.C., or other international agencies, governments and non-governmental organizations.

Pro Bono. International pro bono projects, in addition to those of the International Justice Clinic and International Human Rights Clinic, have included Global Access to Medicine, the Haiti Human Rights Initiative, the Syrian Justice and Accountability Center, and the Iraqi Refugee Assistance Project, a national, student-driven organization where law students and pro bono supervising attorneys work together to help Middle Eastern refugees apply for resettlement into a safe third country.

Student Organizations. UCI Law students have established a variety of organizations with an international focus, including the International Law Society, the Immigration and International Migration Law Society, and Space Law Society.

“Along with other students, I traveled to Northern Ireland to interview civilians, former combatants and civil society organizations about how they viewed the legal protections that cover civilians during conflict. Before our trip, we immersed ourselves in humanitarian law, the history of the Troubles in Northern Ireland, and appropriate interview techniques for trauma victims. It was an unparalleled opportunity. I not only acquired valuable practical skills, but also gained the confidence and experience to know that I can analyze and understand real world, complex international legal questions.”

Adam Barry '13, Attorney, Munger, Tolles & Olson LLP

ROBUST CURRICULUM

In virtually all fields of practice — from criminal law to family law, business law to immigration, intellectual property to human rights — lawyers increasingly face legal problems that cross international borders. UCI Law's first-year International Legal Analysis course focuses on the knowledge and skills needed to analyze and solve these problems, thus providing essential foundations for practicing law in today's global society.

International Legal Analysis serves as a launch pad for a wide range of upper-division international and comparative law courses, including:

- Access to Justice in China
- African Legal Systems
- Chinese Law, Politics and Business
- Comparative Constitutional Law
- Comparative Legal Traditions in a Globalized World
- Conflict of Laws
- Cross-Border Trade in Intellectual Property
- European Union Law and Its Influence
- National Security Law
- International Business Transactions
- International Contracts
- International Criminal Law
- International Environmental Law
- International Human Rights and Humanitarian Law
- International Taxation
- International Trade and Investment Law
- Sociology of Legal Globalization
- Women and The Rule of Law

In addition to substantive coursework focused on international law, UCI Law also runs the following clinics, as part of its nationally acclaimed clinical program:

International Justice Clinic. Directed by Clinical Professor David Kaye, U.N. special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, and recognized by the National Jurist's PreLaw magazine as one of the most innovative clinics in the country, the IJC works with activists, lawyers, diplomats, scholars and NGOs around the world to research, develop and implement advocacy strategies to protect the freedom of opinion and expression.

International Human Rights Clinic. Directed by Adjunct Clinical Professor Paul Hoffman, former ACLU Foundation of Southern California legal director and Amnesty International executive committee member, the IHRC focuses on international and domestic litigation designed to enforce international human rights norms. Students participate in the litigation of pending cases at the trial court and appellate levels.
