

“UCI Law’s Loan Repayment Assistance Program (LRAP) has been invaluable during my first year as an attorney. Instead of having to apply for reduced payments or deferment, LRAP has allowed me to immediately begin managing and paying off my student loans while pursuing a career in public service.”

Tommy McClain, J.D. '13

Program Overview

- Graduates may begin participating in the Loan Repayment Assistance Program (LRAP) within 3 1/2 years (42 months) of their graduation date.
- The UCI Law LRAP is designed to aid graduates who earned the Juris Doctor (J.D.) degree and are employed by either 501(c)(3) nonprofit public interest organizations or government agencies. Qualifying employment is defined as full-time paid work, which means a J.D. degree must be required or the position must rely heavily on law school training.
- The LRAP is integrated with the Income Driven Repayment (IDR) options: Income Based Repayment (IBR) or Pay As You Earn (PAYE) and Public Service Loan Forgiveness provided by the federal government's College Cost Reduction and Access Act of 2007. The LRAP will grant up to 10 years of support to graduates for IDR payments for federal student loan debt provided that their annual income is not greater than $80,000.
- The LRAP will provide loan repayment assistance of all federal student loans incurred during law school as well as those incurred during undergraduate or through other graduate programs prior to attending UC Irvine School of Law.

A primary mission of UC Irvine School of Law is to encourage and support students and graduates who are dedicated to careers in public service law.

To help achieve this goal, the Law School has a Loan Repayment Assistance Program intended to expand the career options of UCI Law graduates by removing the financial burden created by federal education loans, including undergraduate and law school loans.
