About the Public Lecture:

Professor Menkel-Meadow, one of the founders of the international dispute resolution movement, will discuss how "scaling up" mediative and facilitative processes can aid democratic deliberation for policy and lawmaking. She will illustrate with examples of failures and successes from US healthcare legislation and other examples of administrative rule making and governmental decision making.

About the Speaker:

Professor Menkel-Meadow of UC Irvine School of Law (and Georgetown University Law Center) is the A.B. Chettle, Jr. Professor of Dispute Resolution and Civil Procedure and serves as Director of the Georgetown-Hewlett Program in Conflict Resolution and Legal Problem Solving. She has been Faculty Director of Georgetown's innovative partnership with 20 law schools from around the world, the Center for Transnational Legal Studies in London, in which faculty and students from participating programs study international and comparative law in a multi-national setting. Professor Menkel-Meadow has taught in over 25 countries and trained law students, lawyers, judges, diplomats and government officials in dispute resolution on 7 continents and she is the distinguished author of 15 books and over 200 articles.
