Kaaryn Gustafson

UCI Black Thriving Initiative

At UCI Law, we believe in creating a campus culture in which Black people thrive – that same mission is carried through campuswide with the UCI Black Thriving Initiative. The UCI Black Thriving Initiative strives to promote Black well-being and success. It recognizes and responds to systemic anti-Blackness as an existential threat to the mission of the university and calls on all members of the campus community to confront anti-Blackness.

The Law School is proud to be the home of one of five inaugural UCI Inclusive Excellence Term Chair Professors. Kaaryn Gustafson, Professor of Law, Director of the Center on Law, Equality and Race (CLEAR), and Associate Dean of Academic Community Engagement, will receive funds for the next three years to support the course Centering California in the History of Race and Resistance. Professor Gustafson, working with students and colleagues from other UCI departments, will construct an ambitious program of public events and collection of oral histories, written analyses and web-based materials that are focused on public education. She will undertake these activities through CLEAR.

Curricular Innovation

As of April 2021, UCI Law adopted a graduation requirement for all students to complete a graded course which includes substantial content relating to “race and indigeneity, structural inequity and the historical bases for such inequity.”

We are the first University of California law school, and one of just a few law schools nationally, to adopt this requirement.

Received an A- grade in a 2021 ranking of Most Diverse Law Schools (preLaw Magazine).

Listed as one of the best law schools for diversity (No. 2 for Asian students, No. 24 for Hispanic students) (preLaw Magazine).

No. 17 and given an A grade among top racial justice schools (preLaw Magazine).

New Faculty Hires

UCI Law added three new faculty members in 2021 who deepen our commitment to equity, diversity & inclusion and enrich our scholarship and teaching. Aziza Ahmed brings expertise on race, health, feminism and the law; Jamelia Morgan on race, disability and policing; and Ji Seon Song on race, criminal procedure and juvenile justice. With these new hires, we continue to prioritize issues of equity, law and history.

Aziza Ahmed (2021)
Professor of Law
(from Northeastern University School of Law)

Jamelia Morgan (2021)
Assistant Professor of Law
(from the University of Connecticut School of Law)

Ji Seon Song (2021)
Assistant Professor of Law
(from Stanford Law School)

New Research Centers at UCI Law

We're not just part of the conversation, we're leading it.

Fair Elections and Free Speech Center

Directors: Richard L. Hasen, Chancellor's Professor of Law and Political Science, and David Kaye, Clinical Professor of Law and Director of the International Justice Clinic

Established in 2021 after the contentious 2020 U.S. Presidential elections, which culminated in the dangerous January 6, 2021 insurrection in the United States Capitol, the Fair Elections and Free Speech Center at UCI Law is unique in its focus among U.S. and global institutions. It is dedicated solely to advancing an understanding of, and offering means to counter, threats to the stability and legitimacy of democratic governments exacerbated by the unregulated growth of digital media and other technological changes in mass communication. The center facilitates deep scholarship on American law, politics and democracy, as well as on global norms and institutions.

The Future of Latinos in the United States: Law, Opportunity, and Mobility

Director: Rachel F. Moran, Distinguished Professor of Law

The Future of Latinos in the United States: Law, Opportunity, and Mobility is a project that has been underway through the American Bar Foundation and now has a campus home at UCI Law. The project focuses on how law and policy can shape the incorporation of Latinos across the nation through four key drivers of opportunity and mobility: immigration; education; economic participation; political participation and civic engagement.
